

Advertiser Anxiety

Copyright and Trade Dress Infringement

A national advertiser was sued for copyright and trade dress infringement because the packaging of one of its products displayed the same advertising copy and instructions of a competitor. After a federal judge granted a temporary restraining order to prevent further distribution of the infringing packaging, the case was settled for six figures. The legal fees were slightly less than the settlement.